Compelling Character

Reclaimed wood is recovered from old barns, houses, fences and factories across America. It features nail and bolt holes, natural weathering and other signs that provide clues of its unique history of its first use.

It also possesses an appearance not available in most new lumber due to its old-growth roots offering dense grain and a high degree of heart wood.

Old School Advantages

Having been harvested and milled years ago, reclaimed wood is most often old-growth with dense grain, making it harder and more durable than new lumber.

Combine that with the fact that by making beautiful new products out of it we offset the demand for new lumber and prevent old wood from ending up in landfills or burn piles.
